

This month's featured project is Nando's. Keith Rushbrook, Founding Principal at II by IV Design, an internationally renowned design firm specializing in a wide portfolio of award winning projects that includes restaurants and bars discusses the design vision for this legendary casual dining chain.

What is Nando's?

An amazing food concept, originating from Portuguese explorers who landed in South Africa and discovered the spicy Peri-Peri marinades. Each savory chicken location is original, but there is a common thread of vibrant finishes and layers of patterns and textures that pay homage to Nando's roots.

The Design Challenge ...

"Upon entering the space, we saw that our challenge was to find the perfect material for a dramatic feature wall. I immediately contacted Andrew Cooper at ASI and explained our vision for a fresh wood panel with warmth and texture to serve as the backdrop for the South African art on display. The reclaimed walnut Crossfuse® Wood Panels had everything we were looking for!"

The Creativity & Collaboration®

"II by IV Design has collaborated with ASI for over 25 years and they consistently provide very special and unique finishes for our projects and our clients are always very happy. Nando's is a multi-locational chain, but they really make each location incredibly special and different. We were able to draw on the brand's culture and history by specifying the handcrafted Crossfuse® Panels which were also effortless to install and met our budget!"
